

The Lure of the Ultimate Alpha

I believe that one of the reasons that readers love paranormal romance and urban fantasy is that the heroes and heroines can be so much larger than life. They form bonds that no human can, and they perform superhuman feats. They're irresistible—sometimes literally so—and, of course, supernaturally talented. They know what they want...and how to get it.

Dorian Thorne is thousands of years old, and for the last several hundred, he's been hunting for a consort...one he finds in Cora Shaw. He saves her from her terminal illness, but at the same time, she rescues him from the demons within himself.

Biker werewolf Levi Harris is on a crusade to right wrongs done to his people and to shake the control the vampire mafia has over his family. He's an off-white knight, a driven man who wants to see justice done despite his roguish ways.

Chay Bane is a man-made panther shifter who understands the dangers of the beast within. When he meets Tara Morland, who was turned into a panther shifter without her knowledge or consent, he's determined to move heaven and earth to save her. And given his skills and intelligence, he might be the only one in the world able to succeed.

Writing these larger-than-life characters is tons of fun. Not only are they swoon-worthy, but they also all have a kind of nobility that makes them stand out even among heroes.
